Alex Players: Beware This Midscreen Power Bomb Glitch against M. Bison in Street Fighter V

It's a very specific instance in which M. Bison can unexpectedly punish you.

Seems there's a fair number of strange glitches showing up in Season 2 of Street Fighter V; another one has surfaced for Alex that—while very situation-specific—could cost you the fight against an M. Bison.

Ominous_ breaks down this instance in which, following a Power Bomb, a standing heavy kick will miss completely on a crouching and blocking M. Bison—seemingly due to some change in the dictator's hitbox. It only happens on M. Bison, only following a Power Bomb, and only at midscreen—the st.HK connects in the corner. Check the video below, and keep an eye out, as the "whiffed" st.HK opens Alex up to serious punishment.

Even in season 1, there were characters whose hurtboxes could avoid his st.hk on wakeup after power bomb.

Not, sure 'glitch' is the right word.

Not a glitch the same way unblockables weren't a glitch in sf4, unfortunate set of mechanics colliding sideways. I can't imagine the designers meant for it to be cr. hittable but whiffs if blocking.

'Glitch' is probably as good a word as we're going to get for it.

"Glitch (n): a sudden, usually temporary malfunction or irregularity of equipment."

I think we can rule out calling it a malfunction, but considering it an irregularity is pretty fair.
